

Is HGH hormone safe for use by adults who want to increase their muscle size, strength, speed, or athletic ability?

We previously talked about how hormones have their natural level range in the body. If your current HGH levels fall within that normal range and then increase them, you will be putting your body in jeopardy of developing unpleasant side effects. It is not safe to use HGH for bodybuilding or athletic purposes if you have normal HGH levels.

The same applies to young adults who want to use HGH as a means to avoid aging. HGH may appear to have anti-aging abilities when one is older due to the decrease in wrinkles and other benefits. However, it does not stop aging. We cannot stress enough that HGH should only be utilized for legitimate medical issues.

Side effects of increasing HGH levels too high include:

- Carpal tunnel syndrome
- Joint, nerve, and muscle pain
- Edema
- Headaches
- High cholesterol
- Type 2 diabetes

Is HGH safe if purchased without a prescription from an online company?

Some of the HGH that enters the country illegally is of inferior quality and often unsafe to use. The production of real HGH requires a considerable monetary investment by a pharmaceutical company.

HGH is expensive to produce. Cheaply made HGH injections eliminate a critical step that removes dangerous bacterial residue from the final medication. That can result in the development of severe illness. Some people have experienced painful red welts on their body after injecting inferior HGH.

Factories and warehouses in different parts of Asia, including China, do not utilize the same level of quality control that you find here in the US. You may even receive HGH made with rat poison or cement.

To ensure that your HGH is safe to use, always buy it from a licensed US pharmacy. To get a prescription for HGH, you must first undergo blood testing and physical examination.
